TRUSTEES

The last meeting of the Trustees over which the late Very Reverend Father Provincial, Joseph M. Dougherty, O.S.A., presided: Very Reverend Vincent A. McQuade, O.S.A., Very Reverend John B. Martin, O.S.A., Very Reverend James M. Hurley, O.S.A., Father Provincial, Very Reverend Patrick J. Campbell, O.S.A., and Reverend Thomas F. Walsh, O.S.A.

Another most important milestone in Merrimack College's brief history was reached on April 19, 1954, when the Most Reverend Archbishop of Boston, Richard J. Cushing, broke ground for the new chapel dedicated to Christ the Teacher. Here the Archbishop is seen with a part of the crowd present for the historic ceremonies.

The Very Reverend Henry E. Greenlee, O.S.A., S.T.D., Rector-Provincial of the Province of Saint Thomas of Villanova, is Chairman of the Board of Trustees. A former college professor himself before assuming high office in the Augustinian Order, Father Greenlee has manifested a strong personal interest in the development of Merrimack College.

The rugged green countryside of New England, so well known for its colleges and universities, dynamic industries and research centers, became the home of Merrimack College in 1947. A young institution under the guidance of the centuries-old Order of St. Augustine, Merrimack College is the product of the faith which the people of the Merrimack Valley have in the new generation. It stands now, alert to the needs of a present-day America that is crying out for leadership, educating young men and women to be leaders who will employ the teachings and ideals of Christ in their lives.

But how did it come to be that on this site where Abiel Wilson, a God-fearing farmer of the hard soil of New England, struggled generations ago, plowing and reaping on his small farm, we now see handsome Colonial brick buildings and wide roads, cowled figures and hundreds of active students busy in intellectual pursuits? How was it possible that Merrimack College came to be the manifestation of a monumental faith in the youth of the area?

The idea for the founding of a college arose in 1946, out of the deliberations of a Haverhill labor-management group, headed by Mr. J. Leo Cronin. With thousands of returning veterans overtaxing college facilities in the nation, the group resolved to broaden its industrial relations program, and undertake the erection of a suitable college in the north of Boston. They laid their plans before the Right Reverend, and now Bishop, Jeremiah F. Minihan, who was at that time Secretary of His Excellency, Richard J. Cushing. They found a ready friend and ally in the Archbishop. His Excellency secured the Augustinians from Villanova to found and staff the proposed college. Under the inspiring leadership of the Reverend Vincent A. McQuade, O.S.A., Ph.D., who was designated President in December, 1946, the project was launched with the construction of a long, E-shaped classroom building on Peters Street, below Wilson's Corner, North Andover. On September 29, 1947, amidst hammers and saws and fresh cement, the first class of Merrimack College, consisting of 165 men, was under way.

Heritage

This was the start of a most ambitious undertaking. Even in the midst of postwar inflation and uncertainty, tremendous faith was shown by the people of the area, of all faiths, who helped the new college over the rough pioneer years. Witness the Merrimack Association, composed of parents and friends of the college, who organized a huge Penny Sale in 1948 at the Lawrence Memorial Stadium, which raised funds for the construction of a gymnasium. Over eight thousand friends and volunteer associates of the college conducted a nine-month drive for funds, covering all the Northeastern Massachusetts and succeeded in raising well over a million dollars. The work of these volunteers is being carried on today by a group of devoted friends and businessmen known as the Men of Merrimack.

With the funds available from the drive, construction was begun immediately on the upper campus. On September 29, 1948, ground was broken for a modern, thoroughly equipped Science Building. Cushing Hall, as it was named in honor of our beloved patron, was ready for occupancy in late 1949. By September, 1951, the Liberal Arts Building, Sullivan Hall, was completed. Summer of 1952 saw the completion of porticoed Austin Hall, the faculty-administration building.

On September 29, 1952, Archbishop Cushing solemnly blessed the new campus, and dedicated the buildings in an impressive ceremony. This marked the end of the first phase of Merrimack's expansion program, a time of saws and hammers, scaffoldings and bricklaying; it ushered in a quieter time of gradual expansion and beautification. Wide, smooth roadways now unite the various buildings and parking areas; sweeping expanses of grass, bordered with native shrubs and trees now enhance the hilltop site of the campus. Students arriving in the early morning find a place of quiet dignity and serenity, heightened by the natural beauty of its setting.

CASCIA HALL—Girls' Residence

AUSTIN HALL—Administration

The noonday sun shows a scene of intense activity and interest. For the role of a college is to teach, to develop the latent possibilities in its students. Merrimack utilizes diversified curricular and extracurricular activities to develop the well-rounded individual. Admidst Engineering students employing transits and slide rules, Liberal Arts students plumbing the depths of the Humanities, Business Administration majors analyzing graphs and figures, Secretarial Science students learning the intricacies of complex office equipment, Biology students dissecting specimens in the Labs, one will find tomorrow's leaders. Intramural sports are in session on the extensive grounds or in the gymnasium; Student Council meetings are hearing the cases of student violators; political discussion groups are debating the pros and cons of governmental policies. Radio panels record broadcasts for public distribution; the Holy Name Fraternity plans its projects to aid orphans and hospitals; the Sodality of Our Mother of Good Counsel recites the Rosary in the chapel of Austin Hall. The beehive of intellectual, spiritual, and physical activity is remarkable indeed, but what elevates it out of the commonplace is the fact that all of it is centered around the precepts of the Catholic religion laid down by Christ for all men.

GUILD HALL—Engineering

On April 19, 1954, the Feast of Christ the King, His Excellency Archbishop Cushing once more returned to his beloved Merrimack College to break ground for the new Collegiate Chapel of Christ the Teacher. A gift from the Archbishop himself, the large modern chapel will provide a permanent and fitting home for the religious exercises of the college and will stand as a symbol of the centrality of Christ in a Catholic college.

Administration

The name of the Very Reverend Vincent A. McQuade, O.S.A., Ph.D. is synonymous with the birth and growth of Merrimack College. The first President and guiding genius of this institution of higher learning, his breadth of vision coupled with masterful administration has accomplished the realization of a dream.

The Reverend Joseph J. Gildea, O.S.A., Ph.D. is Dean of the Faculty and Director of the Division of Arts and Sciences. Director of high academic policy, no professorial or student problem is too insignificant for his personal, sympathetic attention. Here is truly a holy Priest, a perfect gentleman.

Liberal Arts

Attentive students busily jot notes as the professor outlines the essential points. The individual attention stressed in the close teacher-student relationship of Merrimack's small classes is something never fully understood by those who have not had the opportunity to attend a small college. Classroom work is dwarfed, however, by the hours of preparation necessary to complete thoroughly the required work.

Deep in concentration, these students prepare for tomorrow—the "tomorrow" they have awaited four long years.

The bond between teacher and student is especially evident in this seminar scene. Seminar classes, where students are urged to express themselves freely, are a beneficial and interesting approach to liberal education.

Students planning to enter the Business field can supplement their training by seeking advice. Placement Director Simeon LeGendre interviews an interested Senior.

Senior Jay Martin gains valuable administrative and technical experience by teaching fundamentals of Accounting to Freshmen during a Lab session.

Typing ability is an invaluable asset to any businessman. Dick Bernardin practices keyboard drills to supplement the typing course instruction.

Business Administration

The distinguishing characteristic of Merrimack's School of Business is that here the students undertake a curriculum which includes not only the basic business subjects but also philosophy and the arts. The purpose is to give each student a well-rounded background so that he may succeed in the art of living a full, more useful life.

Engineering

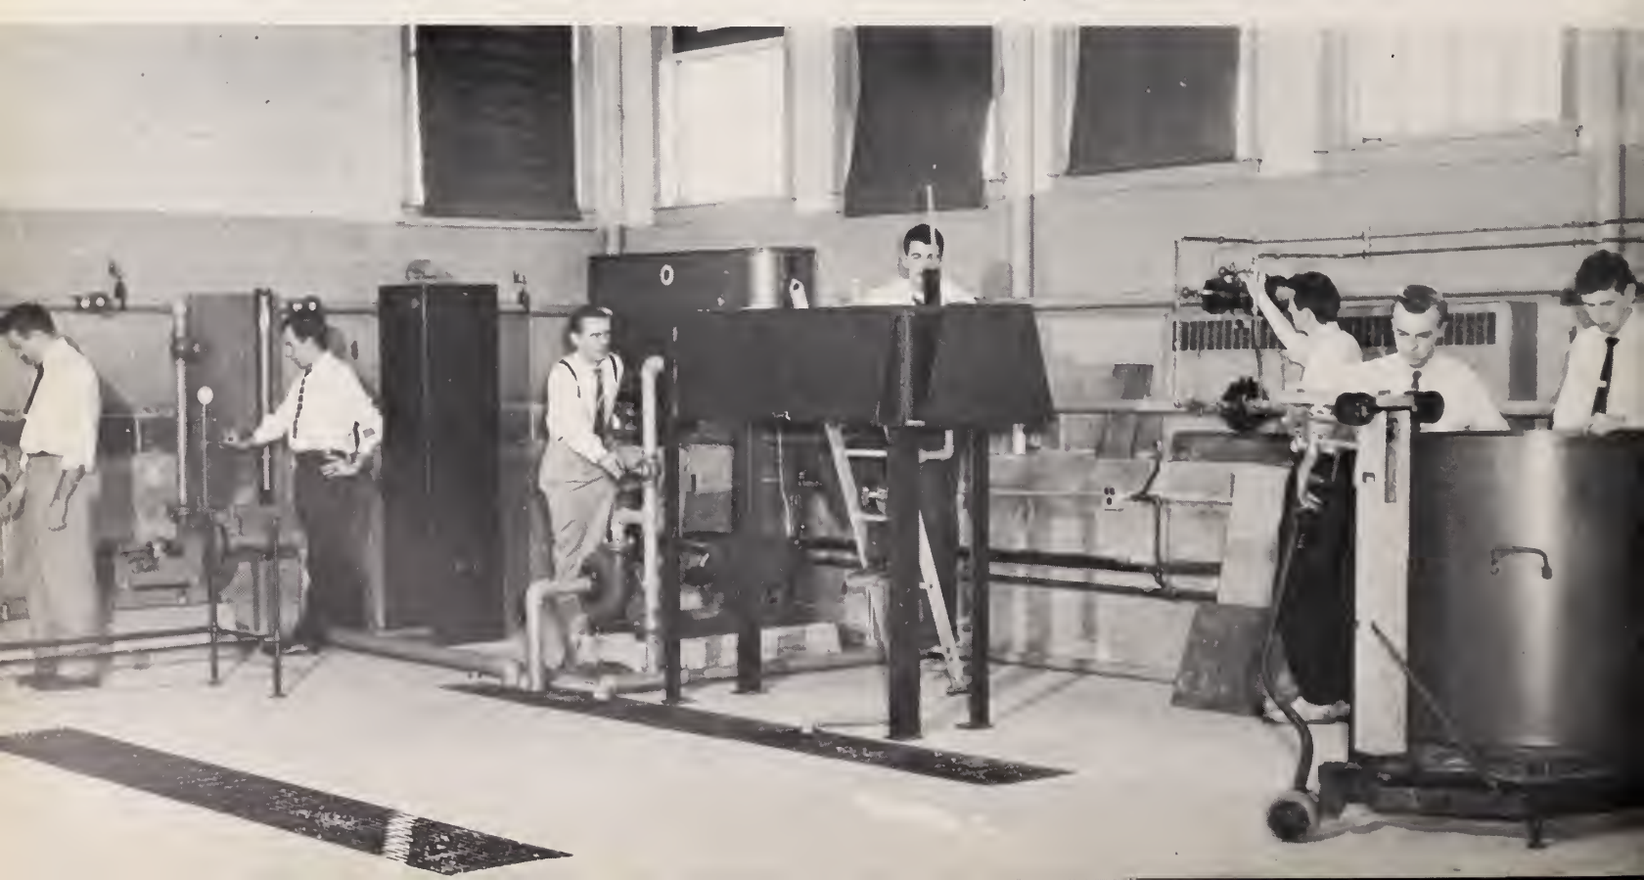
The elements of surveying require much field practice; regardless of weather, the engineers are there!

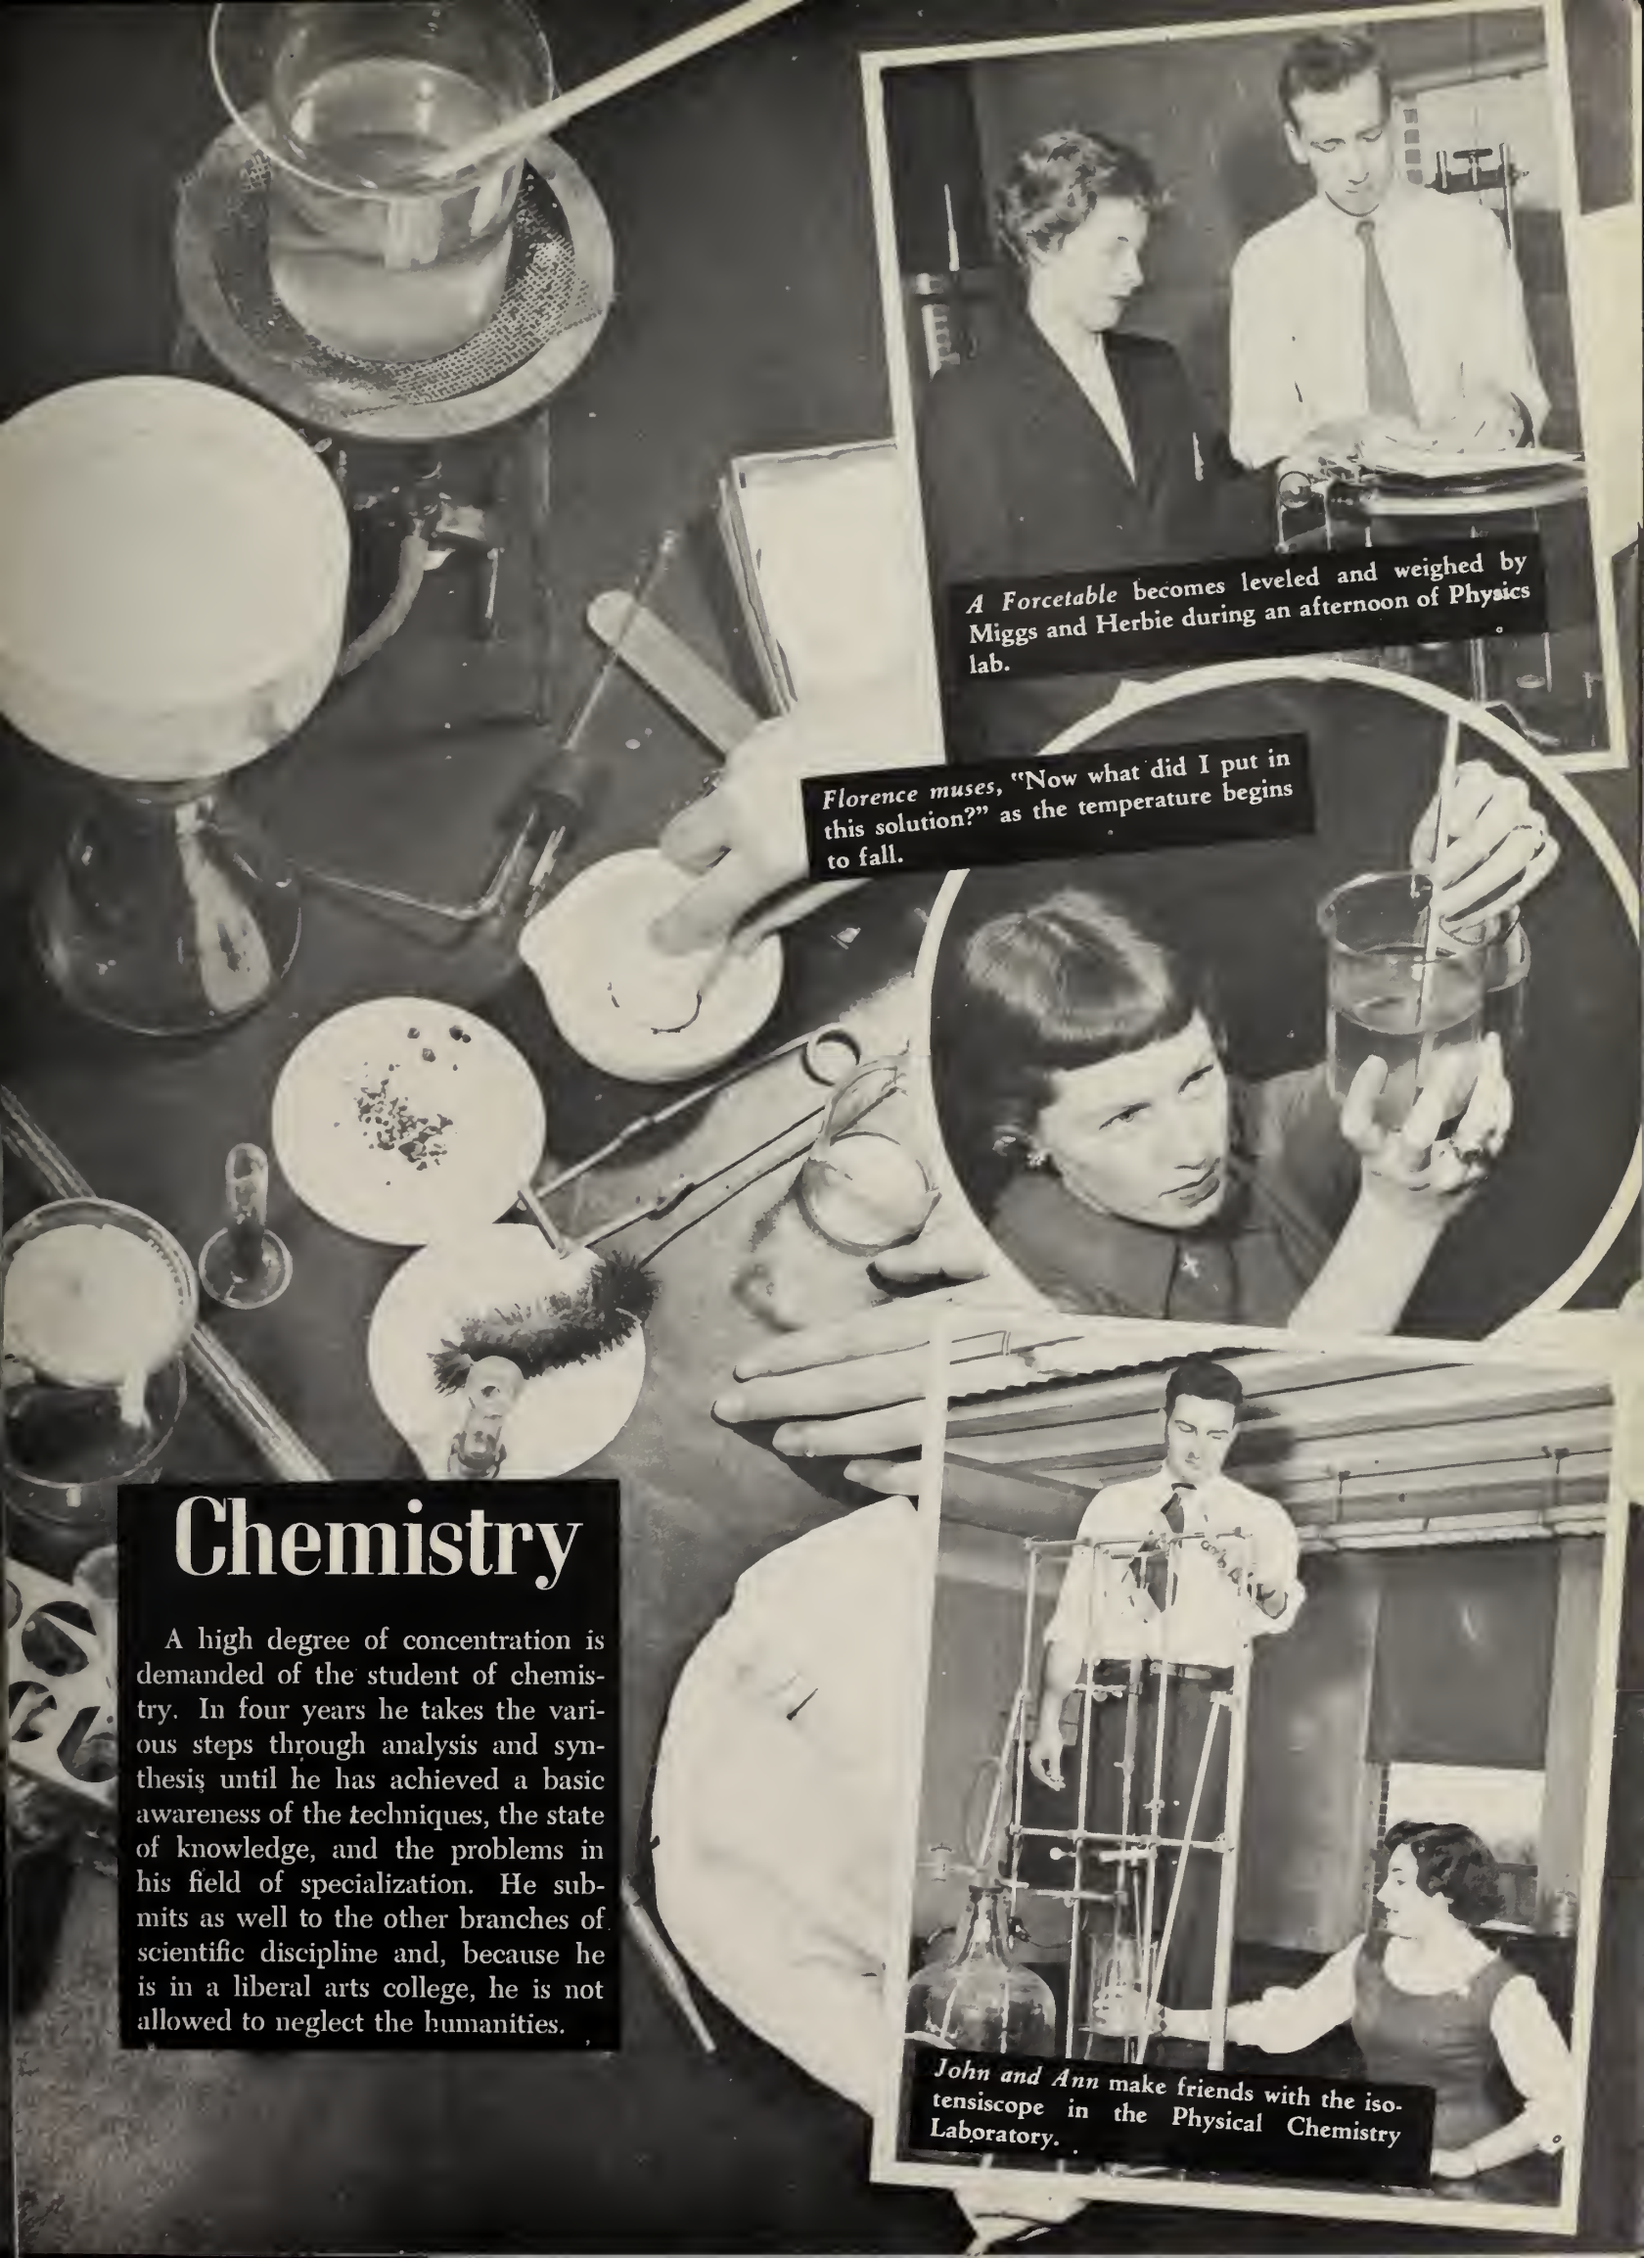
From concept to design, each step of an engineer's plan is expressed by the draftsman.

During the past four years since the Fall of 1951, the Division of Engineering has grown rapidly and now offers courses in both Civil and Electrical Engineering.

Throughout their four college years, the student engineers are trained in the basic engineering sciences with the ultimate aim of learning to apply these fundamental concepts to the varied problems encountered in the life of a professional engineer.

The analysis of fluids in motion with respect to various flow conditions in the distributing lines is undertaken by this group of student engineers.





A Forcetable becomes leveled and weighed by Miggs and Herbie during an afternoon of Physics lab.

Florence muses, "Now what did I put in this solution?" as the temperature begins to fall.

John and Ann make friends with the isotensiscope in the Physical Chemistry Laboratory.

Chemistry

A high degree of concentration is demanded of the student of chemistry. In four years he takes the various steps through analysis and synthesis until he has achieved a basic awareness of the techniques, the state of knowledge, and the problems in his field of specialization. He submits as well to the other branches of scientific discipline and, because he is in a liberal arts college, he is not allowed to neglect the humanities.

Pre-Medical Pre-Dental

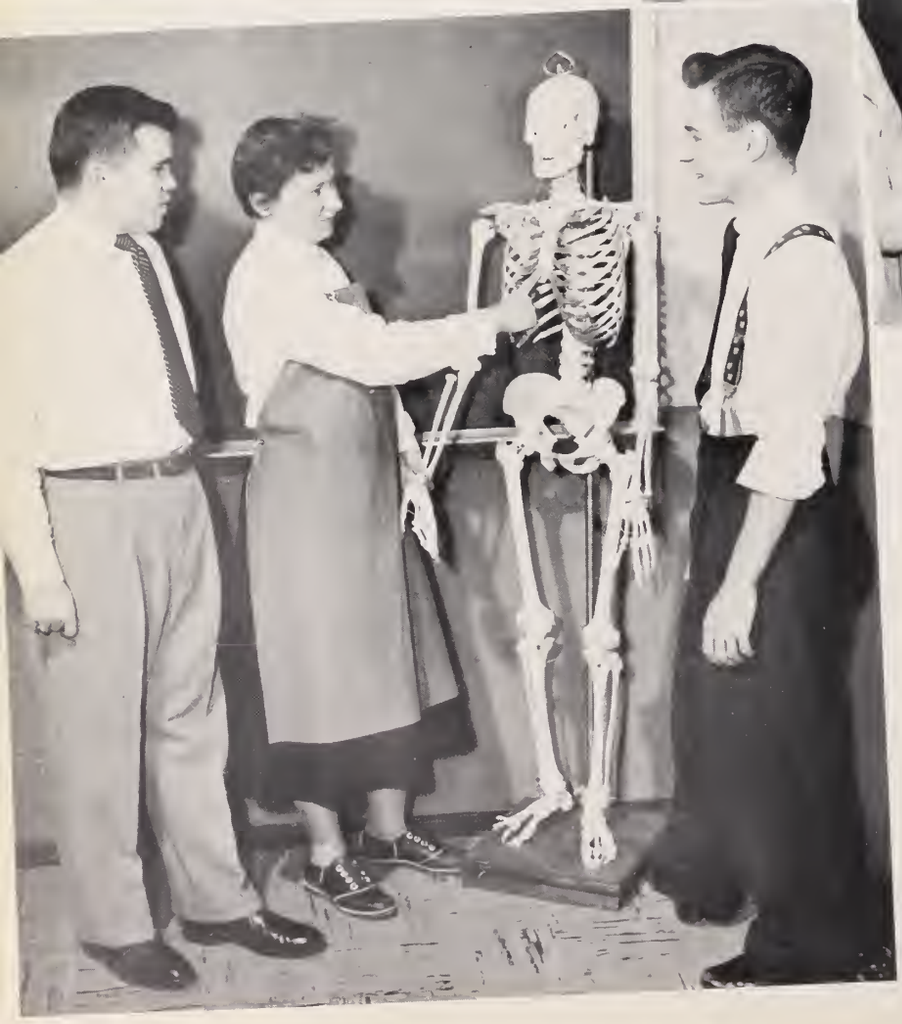
The microscope aids in the recognition, identification, and study of the different types of bacteria, tissue, and other minute phenomena.

Ginger and Joe place bacterial cultures in the incubator as part of the practical work required of science-minded students.

By examining an actual skeleton, these students realize the importance of even the smallest bone in the human skeletal system.



The study of medicine is long and difficult. Prospective doctors and dentists begin by laying the foundation for a career that will benefit both themselves and mankind. A proper scientific background and the fundamentals of humanitarian and cultural courses are acquired in four years of unglamorous and unglorified work. Patience and fortitude are perhaps the greatest attributes that a scientific-minded student can possess as he prepares to add his name to the list of those who have served humanity.

Summer and Evening Sessions

Part-time sessions at Merrimack are divided between courses during the summer months and evening classes during the regular school year.

Adult education is the primary concern of the Evening Division. Here ambitious representatives of all walks of life devote their evening hours to intellectual pursuits. The rewards are Associate Degrees in Arts or Business Administration, or Certificates in Secretarial Science.

Summer classes afford educational opportunities to those whose work allows them little time during the regular school year. Religious teachers are brought up to date on the latest findings in literature, history and science; students make up required credits and businessmen learn the new techniques of management.

Ah! just the thing to relieve that dryness on hot sweltering days in summer school. These three students don't look too unhappy, just anxious for the dismissal bell so they can enjoy a cool, refreshing swim.

When the lights go on, the evening students take over.

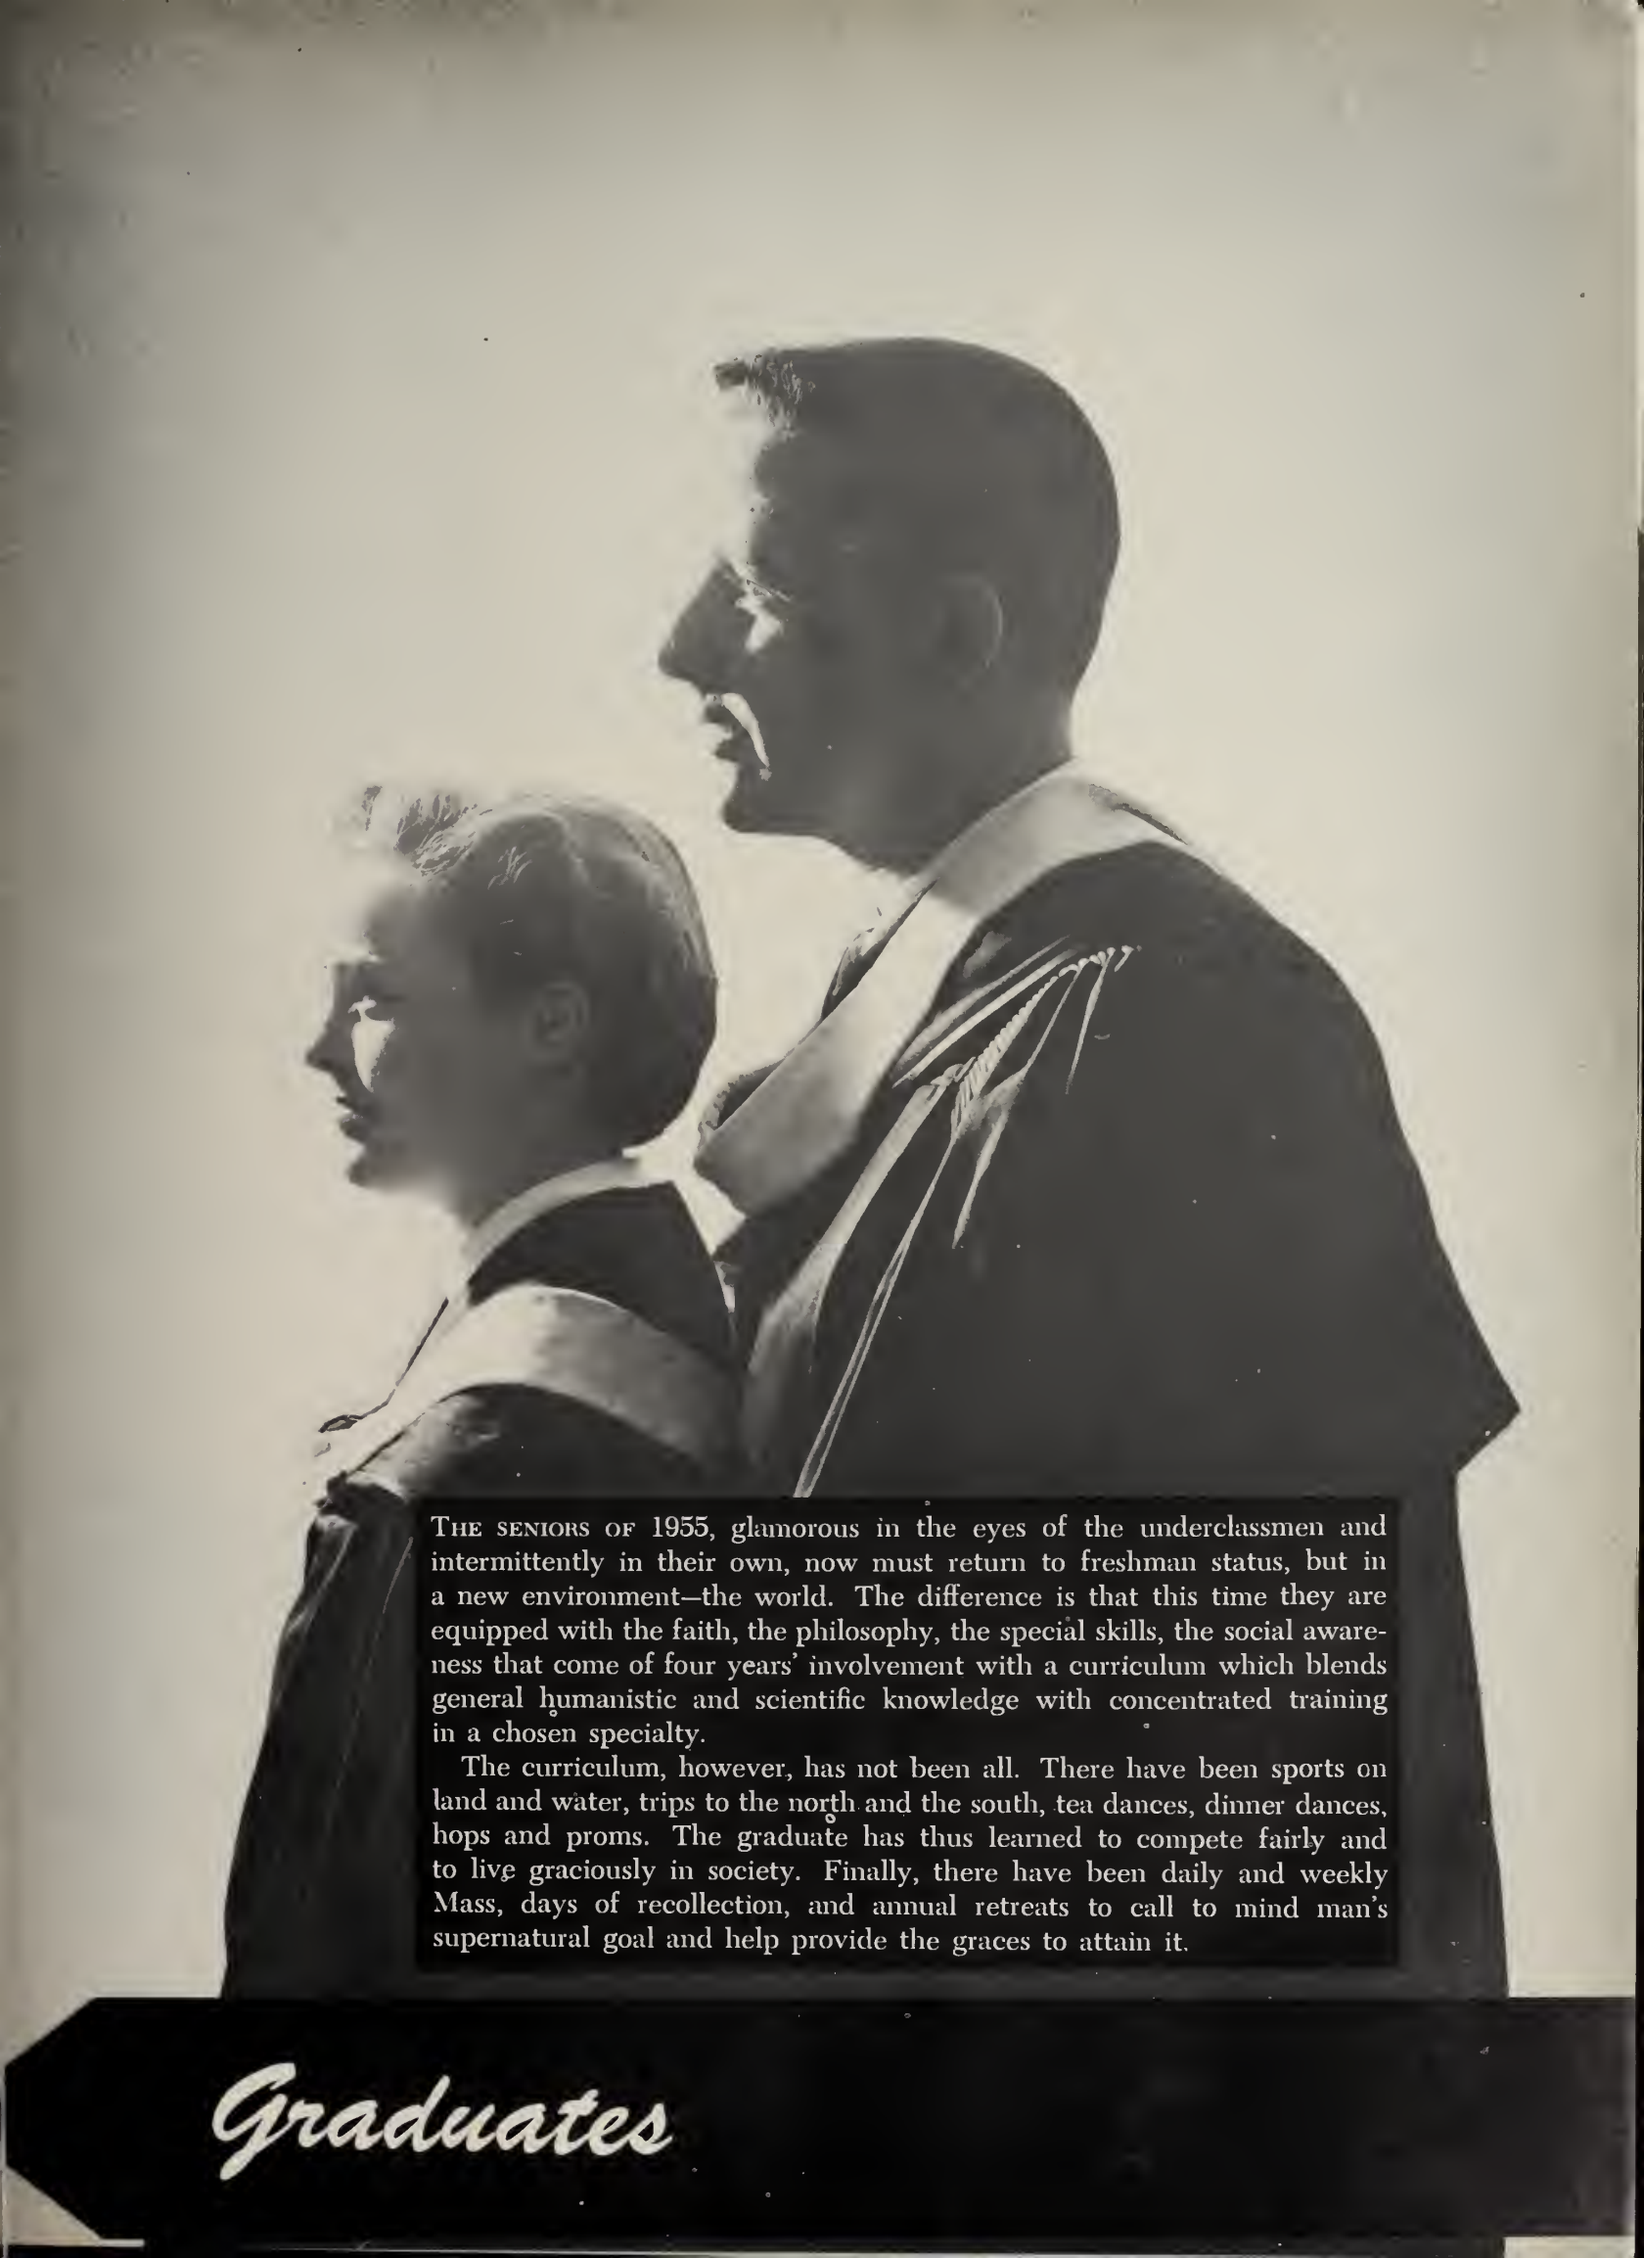
Secretarial Science

Although much emphasis is placed on taking, reading, and typing shorthand notes, the efficient secretary must be capable of effectively transcribing from machine dictation.

Today's secretarial field is alive with opportunities for skilled personnel who are willing to assume responsibility. The two-year and four-year courses at Merrimack offer adequate facilities for the proper training of secretaries. The students concentrate on the acquisition of special skills—typewriting, shorthand, transcription, mathematics, and accounting. In addition, they study cultural subjects in order to broaden their horizon. Through a system of electives in advertising, journalism, merchandising, sales management, finance, and marketing the prospective secretary is permitted to obtain an acquaintance with various other fields. This rich curriculum, a staff of experienced professors, and a well-equipped department combine to produce a corps of trained secretaries each year. A constant demand from business and government emphasize the importance of the division.

"Speed and accuracy" is the motto of all secretaries. These two-year "secs" are diligently at work striving for greater speed and perfection at the keyboard.



THE SENIORS OF 1955, glamorous in the eyes of the underclassmen and intermittently in their own, now must return to freshman status, but in a new environment—the world. The difference is that this time they are equipped with the faith, the philosophy, the special skills, the social awareness that come of four years' involvement with a curriculum which blends general humanistic and scientific knowledge with concentrated training in a chosen specialty.

The curriculum, however, has not been all. There have been sports on land and water, trips to the north and the south, tea dances, dinner dances, hops and proms. The graduate has thus learned to compete fairly and to live graciously in society. Finally, there have been daily and weekly Mass, days of recollection, and annual retreats to call to mind man's supernatural goal and help provide the graces to attain it.

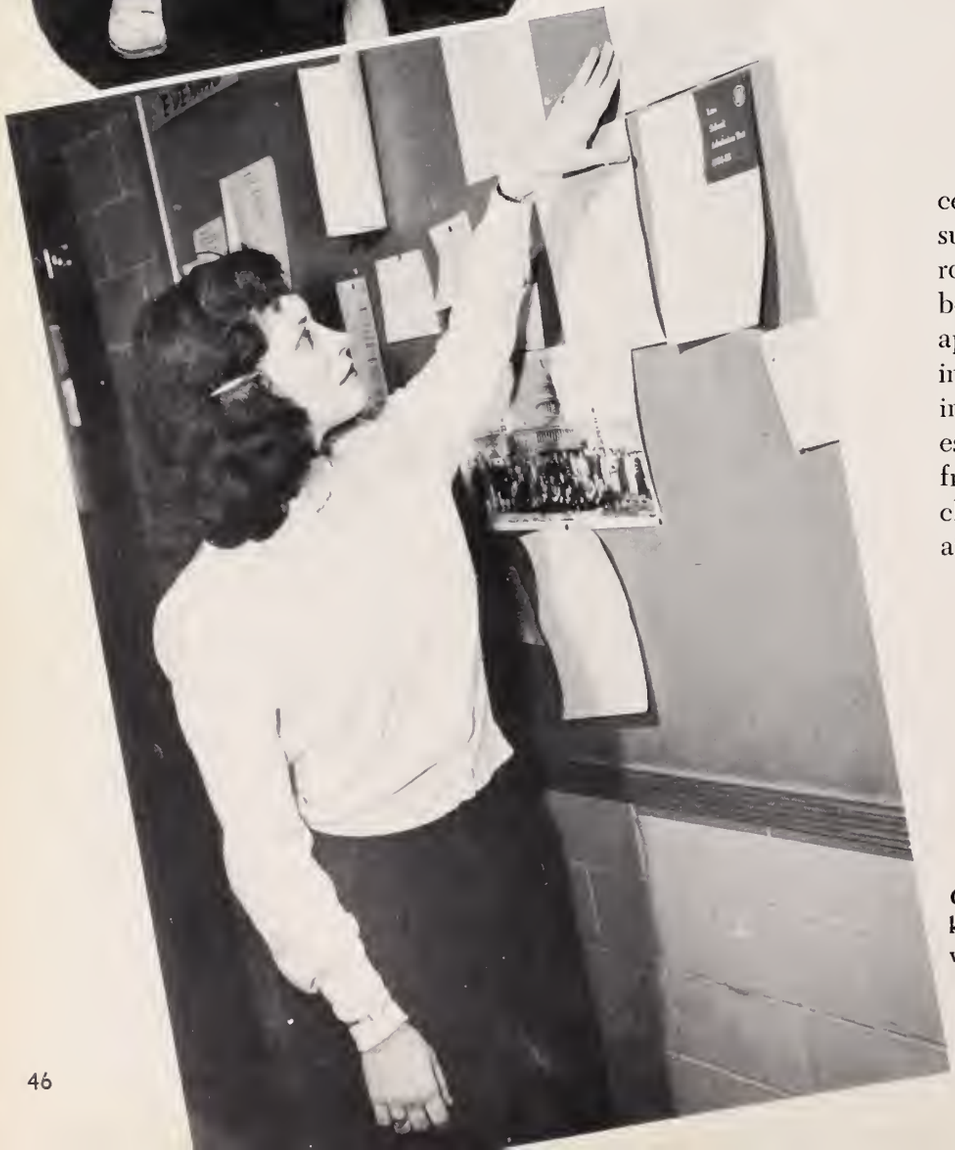
Undergraduates

The Orientation Committee keeps frosh on their toes. Listen to those questions and answers fly!

Jane and Joe Frosh add spice to the Orientation Dance with their version of the Bunny Hop.

Freshmen

Bewilderment and amazement were clearly discernible on the faces of the Class of 1958 as they surged "en masse" through the corridors, the classrooms, and the cafeteria. Beanies and handbooks became the order of the day, and the sudden approach of orientation officers signified impending doom. Class schedules which once seemed so involved soon became clearer while the subjects, especially math and science, became dim. New friendships soon arose as the Frosh and upperclassmen mingled in the social and intellectual affairs of the campus.



Check that bulletin board!—or how to keep posted on campus activities and who's on the carpet now?

The task of organizing the loose ends of the Freshman year falls to the first class officers in their Sophomore year.

Fair weather, a convertible, and no afternoon classes mean a chance for a spur-of-the-moment excursion.

Traditionally, the Sophomore-sponsored Orientation Dance frees the Freshmen from the yoke of beanies, buttons, and Sophomore domination.

There is a certain zest in returning for the Sophomore year. The strangeness of college life has dissipated with confidence borne of experience. The fullness of academic and extracurricular life has become unjumbled and the possibilities of high education begin to dawn. On the scholastic level advanced courses and a familiarity with collegiate procedure renders the routine at once more interesting and more fruitful. Then there is the opportunity to assist the Freshmen in treading their way through the academic maze that once troubled us and the fun of the Orientation Program. The Sophomore Cotillion marks their debut into the formal social functions of their college career.

JUNIORS

Intermission between dances finds Bill and Meredith relaxing on a comfortable bale of straw used to add the country flavor at the annual barn dance.

Frank O'Connor, Junior Class "Mixologist," prepares the punch for the Junior Prom. It's easy to see that besides having experience in this sort of thing, Frank also likes the work.

1956

The Junior Class has had its most fruitful year—academically and socially. It was a year in which we studied subjects that oriented our training towards fields in which we intend to concentrate. On the extracurricular side we followed tradition by virtually "taking charge" of the social events once the Spring term had begun. The social highlight of the semester came when Junior Week—featuring formals, sports day, and parents' night—proved to be one of the most successful in the history of the college. Indeed we have built up a rare camaraderie that will continue through next year and into the future.

Religion

Religion at Merrimack College is not merely another course that all Catholic students take. Rather it spreads beyond the classroom and gives aim and direction to our whole life. It is of first importance that our religious training be on the same academic level as the rest of our college education. A thorough knowledge of Divine Revelation and a reasoned motivation to put the principles we have learned into practice is the ultimate purpose of our religious training. Under the guidance of the Augustinian Fathers we have been taught the Catholic way of life.

We, the Class of 1955, must step into a world that should recognize the supreme position of God in the universe. We must endeavor to thwart pagan and materialistic beliefs by practicing the principles and high ideals of Catholicism. By so doing we can effectively demonstrate to the world that Christ is indeed "the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

Members of the Sodality and Holy Name Society meet monthly for informal communion breakfasts on the college campus.

Representing the Sodality and Holy Name Society, Ruth Levesque and John Murphy plan religious functions with our chaplain, Father Hannan.

Dick Hillner and Norman Martin prepare the portable confessional for weekly confessions. The Sacrament of Penance is available to all Catholic students at any time.

Archbishop Cushing offers Benediction on the Feast of Corpus Christi, for the graces and supplications of the student body.

The members of the Sodality of Our Mother of Good Counsel acquaint their mothers with the school and with each other at the annual Mother and Daughter Tea.

Reverend Paul M. Judson, O.S.A., our retreat master at the annual pre-semester retreat, conducted inspiring conferences for the student body.

Living Faith

Religion at Merrimack College extends beyond the lecture hall and permeates directly and indirectly all the activities of college life. The Reverend James Hannan, O.S.A., Chaplain to the College, directs a well-organized and varied religious program which includes daily Mass, frequent opportunity for reception of the Sacraments, weekly sermon, novena devotions, and recitation of the rosary. The Sodality of Our Mother of Good Counsel and the Holy Name Guild are the chief agencies for the promotion of other allied functions. The erection of the new chapel of Christ the Teacher will be of inestimable value in caring for the needs of an expanding school.

The new chapel dedicated to Christ the Teacher gradually assumes its commanding position on the Merrimack campus.

Rose Dardano supplies the college religious pamphlet rack with interesting Catholic literature.

BASKETBALL

The determined Merrimack Warriors faced the 1954-1955 basketball season with renewed optimism. Highlights of the year were the acquisition of new coach, Kevin Harrington; first-year membership in the National Collegiate Athletic Association; Jay Martin's forty-two point total in the opener against St. Anselm's.

The happy "Warriors" reflect confidence prior to their first game against St. Anselm's as they pose for the Merrimackan photographer.

In legal circles possession is nine-points of the law, but on the basketball court it assumes even greater importance. Using his height to great advantage Lou Demetroulakos stakes his claim.

Vin Gomes, always elusive, again proves his ball-hawking ability by stealing the ball and racing the length of the court for a lay-up during the Merrimack-Salem game.

As effective on the defense as he is on the offense, Jay Martin frustrates an opponent's attempt to score.

The Vaulting Varsity

The Warriors show some of the form that made them a better than average team, as Coach Harrington looks on.

The Merry Macs . .

Basketball success is enhanced by the presence of the pretty Warrior maidens. They comprise the cheering section which is also worth cheering about.

In harmony with the teachings of noted educational theorists who state that a sound body is an essential concomitant of a sound mind, Merrimack offers a wide and diversified field of athletic endeavor. Consisting of skiing, sailing, hockey, tennis, and intramural basketball, the sports program encompasses the four seasons, enabling the student to keep athletically active and healthy the year round.

Respected academically, Merrimack has begun to vie for recognition in the sports world. Its early successes in sailing, tennis, and hockey plus the ever-growing interest in basketball and skiing augur well for the future.

Now boasting of ten teams, the intramural league supplies the student with an opportunity for indoor recreation during the long winter months.

in the Gym . . .

Hockey is for those whose athletic tendencies lean toward the fast and furious. Erected by Father Thabault, the rink is the newest campus addition.

Study? Are you mad? With a fast game of tag-rush tearing up the quadrangle between Cushing and Sullivan. The library lies in cobwebs spring and fall—there are more important things to do.

STUDENT COUNCIL

Government At Work

The most important function of the Student Council is the imitation, within a small framework, of the workings of democracy. The spirit of mature self-government is the moving force behind the Council's guidance of student activities. Student experience in working with the Council, or under the supervision of the council, is valuable for future adjustment in a democratic society.

In accordance with these ideals, the Student Council has an organization of committees with each councillor charged with directing one committee. These committees have jurisdiction over the parking area, club constitutions, the blood drive, conditions in the cafeteria and buildings, appointments to the N.F.C.C.S. and sports and social activities.

In addition to these activities, a 1954 innovation provides for a public relations committee to stimulate newspaper reporting of current activities at Merrimack. The council also established, in 1954, a Campus Fund for Charitable Organizations. The expansion and success of the Student Council reflects the advancement of Merrimack College campus and community life.

"Clean up that table!" Frank Hagerty and cohorts go around the "caf" executing the hardest job the student councilor must face—policing the "caf" and keeping his friends at the same time. "Ah, well, the burdens of office, 'ma friend'."

As the Council legislates, so the Student Court sits as judge according to the Constitution of the Student Council. Freshmen offenders, such as are seen here, usually keep the court in weekly session during Orientation period.

In the dignified atmosphere appropriate to governmental bodies the Student Council sits to discuss initial plans for the Campus Fund for Charitable Organizations. Grace Mutrux, secretary-treasurer, reads the minutes of the last meeting including the list of pending business. The Council meets in executive session each week.

A Merrimack co-ed rests after answering the Red Cross' call for blood donations. The Student Council planned this year's Blood Drive with Dick Hillner serving as chairman.

As the classroom is the center of intellectual life on campus so the cafeteria is the center of discussion and conversation. Here, a group of students discuss the latest edition of the Warrior.

Proofreader Dick Gilmore directs the rewriting with Warrior typist Jean Sommer and Jean Abraham.

"The machine that does the work and the man who does the work."

The Warrior

The purpose and function of a college newspaper is not only to acquaint the student body with all the activities of the college but to provide an outlet for their latent literary talent. It gives students who participate on the paper a chance to work in an organization and learn the fundamental concept of cooperation which will be invaluable to them in their post-graduate days.

To those who do not actively participate, the newspaper provides a necessary link between campus activities and themselves. It affords them an understanding of the work of campus clubs and the paper's editorials show them what their fellow students think about current problems.

If one were to name the primary reason for the maintenance of a college newspaper, stimulation of thought would undoubtedly be the first choice. In the long run the ultimate purpose of a college education is the exchange and stimulation of ideas.

Merrimack's newspaper functions out of a second floor office in Sullivan Hall. Here, plans for each edition are made at staff meetings held two weeks prior to the deadline date. Completed assignments are later turned over to proof-readers who correct errors before and after the copy is set at the printers. Next, the layout editor and chief editor plan page formats as last minute news items are processed. Finally, the editor discusses final layout plans with the printer and another issue is put "to bed."

Fresh from the printers, a new issue of the Warrior is ready for distribution by the Circulation Department, headed by Arthur Archambault and Adele Byron.

Editor-in-Chief Stan Donnelly gathers his staff about him as they formulate plans for next month's payout and set that all-important deadline date.

This is one of the rare occasions when the general staff meets to organize the various departments into a functioning whole.

The Merrimackan

Each year the MERRIMACKAN staff has for its goal the creation and publication of a permanent record of a year's highlights and activities—another chapter in the history of the college. Each phase of the enterprise has its difficulties. The chapter must not be monotonous, so it is enlivened with pictures of the students who make the news. Nor must it be disproportionate, so the yearbook encompasses all the significant events and activities, and allots space to each according to its importance in the life of the college. The treatment of the chapter must be organized; it is focussed around a central theme. If the requisites of a yearbook are diligently fulfilled, the goal of creation becomes a reality. But the annual must also be published and hence financed. The financing of the MERRIMACKAN is a task that the staff members cannot accomplish themselves. They need the support of patrons and benefactors. They require the aid of those who are altruistically interested in the development of the college in general and the yearbook in particular.

This year we are proud to say the goal has been achieved once again. We of the staff have written another chapter of Merrimack history but we used for our ink the cooperation of the students and the generous patronage of our benefactors.

Business Manager Leo Bergeron supervises his hardworking staff. These co-eds take care of all correspondence, contributions, payments, and records necessary to maintain an efficient organization. The financial success of the Merrimackan depends on their efforts.

"We goin' to the office, Dad?" —Merrimackan Editor Jim Mulligan makes it a family affair. His three boys are in training for their turn on the staff. Jamie, Kevin, and Terry, Vice-Presidents in charge of book bearing.

Daniel E. McLean, City Manager of Haverhill, Massachusetts, discusses the history of local government with members of the combined activity group under the guidance of Professor of Social Science, James St. Germain. The meeting was held in the city council chamber of the Haverhill town hall.

Sociology and Political Science

The Sociology and Political Science Discussion Clubs combined functions this year with the hope of showing that, in practice, government cannot be separated from the social welfare of the people.

Under the direction of Professor James St. Germain the group made visits to nearby cities to study local government. Professor Paul M. Shea also conducted field trips to state remedial institutions for sociological case studies.

Among their many activities, the members of the clubs visited the Major's office in Lawrence, Massachusetts, the office of the city manager in Haverhill, Massachusetts, the Tewksbury State Infirmary. The group also interviewed Mayor John Buckley of Lawrence on the radio and took an active part in the state elections by working for their respective party organization.

Social-minded members of the Sociology and Political Science Discussion Clubs prepare for one of their bi-weekly visits to nearby institutions.

Four members of the Young Democrats get the latest political news from the Times during a brief intermission in the cafeteria. Being well-informed is a prime requisite for participation in political discussions.

Young Democrats and Republicans

It is not enough to learn merely the elements and principles of political science. As in all phases of education the will to put one's knowledge into effect is an absolute necessity. It was to forward participation in public life that the Young Democrat and Young Republican clubs were formed at Merrimack College. Periodic meetings are held to review the functioning of party machinery in the United States, to examine the parties' platform, and to observe the various means used to propagandize the electorate. Members are urged to participate actively in political campaigns and in "getting out the vote." By insisting on strict parliamentary procedure and high political ethics, the clubs hope to inculcate a sound training in the ways and means of interesting members in government and so produce responsible Catholic citizens.

A bulletin board notice holds the attention of these Young Republicans as they get the latest word on the political program of the administration. Regular posting of important material keeps members abreast of developments.

Literary and Debating Clubs

The Austin Debating Society and the Literary Club are student organizations primarily designed for educative purposes.

The Debating Society, by having its members argue the pros and cons of selected topics, seeks to develop in them an ability to use language and logic effectively; and thereby gain poise in public speaking.

The Literary Club aims to promote the students' appreciation of literature through weekly meetings, featuring readings, lectures, informal discussions, and playgoing junkets.

Both clubs have the common goal of emphasizing the pleasurable aspects of intellectual pastimes, and this is manifested in the enthusiasm of their members.

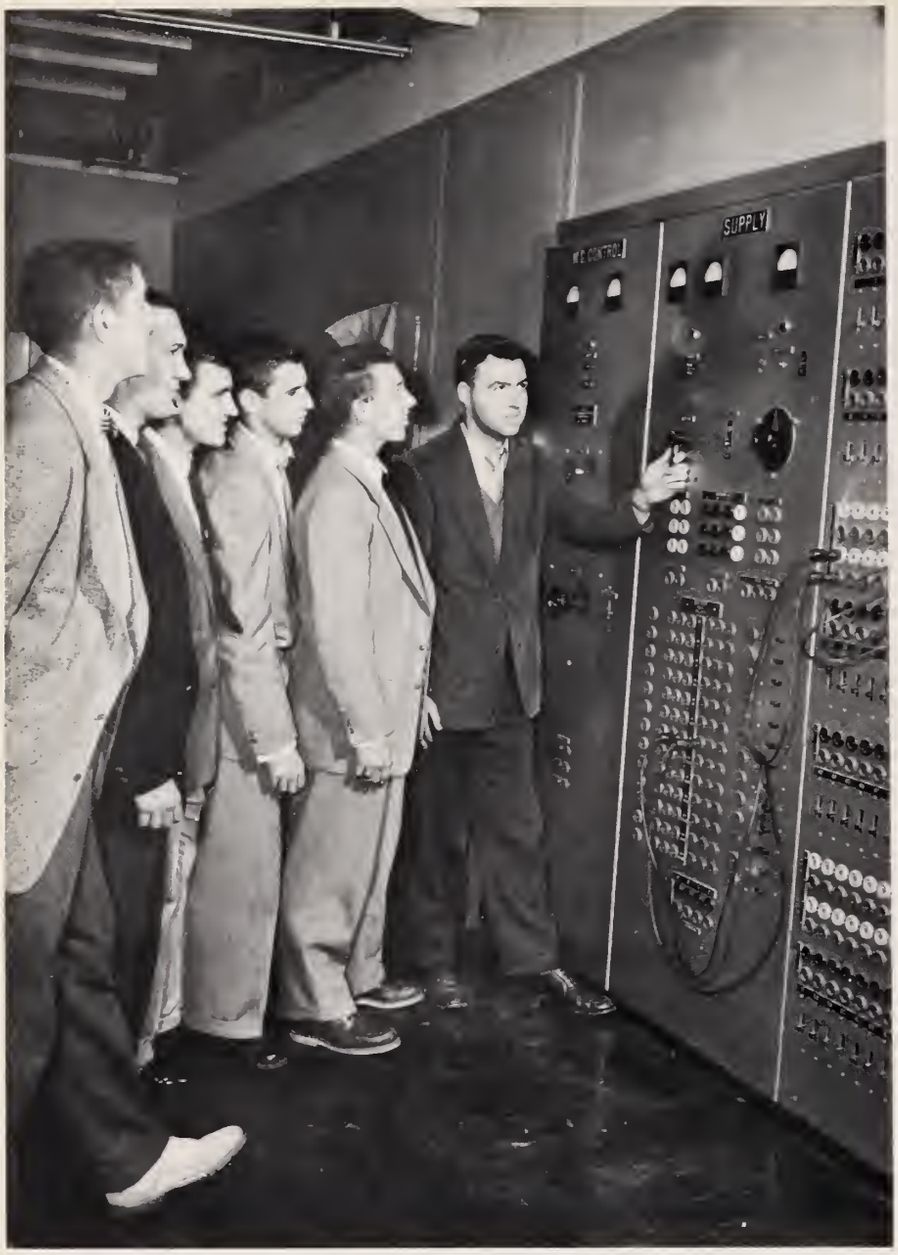
The Literary Club members assemble for the interpretative reading of poems to supplement classroom work. Lectures on foreign literatures by members of the faculty and phonograph records of plays are regular features.

Many hours of planning and practice are necessary requisites for the improvement of arguments and the development of analytic skill. Here Louise Pothier drives home a point.

The Engineering Guild of the college serves to unite the rapidly growing number of student engineers on campus. Through lectures given by noted engineers, the students attain a more professional outlook toward the various phases of engineering science.

Engineering Club and Benzene Ring

The functioning of the Benzene Ring revolves around student lectures. Here an aspiring chemist presents some of his findings for discussion.



The Accounting Club features regular field trips to nearby business establishments designed to familiarize the members with practical business procedure. Members here inspect some technical equipment.

Accounting and Business Clubs

The Accounting Club exists in order to apply and supplement the knowledge gained in the classroom. Professional men frequently visit the club and acquaint the members with the situations and opportunities in the business world. In turn, the club organizes field trips to the offices in the surrounding area, where the members can see professional accountants at work.

The Business Club, a new organization on campus this year, includes in its membership the majors in Accounting, Marketing, Business Administration, Four-Year Secretarial Science, and Economics.

The club promotes intercollegiate relations through its affiliation with the student chapter of the American Marketing Association, and this year handled the publicity for the regional conference of the Association.

On campus, the Club has enabled its members to familiarize themselves with all phases of business and to adequately express themselves in public. In addition, the Club has held frequent luncheon conferences where featured speakers have kept the members abreast of current business developments.

Officers of the Business Club distribute membership cards to members in good standing. The practical aspects of running an organization serves to train members for their future place in the business world.

Glee Club and NFCCS

Father Wynne, Director of the Choral Society, and William McMahon, accompanist, render a piano duet at the Spring Concert held in the Refectory of Austin Hall for a large audience.

The Choral Society is the oldest organized activity at Merrimack College. Student interest has always been high, and a large number of talented performers has made possible a continued series of excellent concerts. The versatility of the group is indicated by the execution of selections from the masters, cantatas, and musical comedies. The annual Spring Concert is the highlight of the musical season.

The basic goal of the National Federation of Catholic College Students is to develop and coordinate the humanitarian and the intellectual interests of Catholic college students throughout the United States by forming nation-wide projects.

On our own campus, the Sociology Club and the International Relations Club, both affiliated with the Federation, provide students with excellent opportunities for fruitful Catholic action.

The supervisory nature of the N.F.C.C.S. demands a great deal of planning and paperwork. Left to Right: John Lee, Bill McKeon, and Phil Doyle discuss organizational plans.

Bow tie's straight — everything's set—Gino's rarin' to go! . . .

No wonder Gino's anxious — such a pretty miss . . .

Show them how to do it, Joe! . . .

Time out from dancing, John, but only for a second.

A wonderful night is ending as the band plays "Goodnight, Ladies."

The last step of a perfect week . . . too bad it has to end.

. . . But don't spoil it by looking in on us.

. . . We only want to say goodnight . . .

mmm — Here comes the lobster!

The music is for dancing.

Dining in the grand manner.

SENIOR BALL

She is the Queen and she's with me.

our formal ending . . .

Capturing the country club atmosphere!

GRADUATION

Reverend Joseph Gildea, O.S.A., Ph.D., Dean of the Faculty, presents Bishop Minihan for an honorary degree.

On June 2, 1954, Merrimack's fourth commencement exercise was held from the portico of Austin Hall. Eighty-two candidates received their respective A.B. and B.S. degrees, and eleven members of the Secretarial Science Department were awarded Certificates of Proficiency from the Part-Time Division, seven students were awarded Associate Degrees in Business Administration. The Very Reverend President conferred the degrees, and the address to the graduates was given by the Most Reverend Jeremiah Minihan, D.D., Auxiliary Bishop of Boston.

Honorary Degrees were conferred on several distinguished guests: Doctor of Laws to Daniel J. Murphy, and Right Reverend Augustine C. Dalton, and Right Reverend Thomas J. Riley; Doctor of Letters to the Most Reverend Jeremiah F. Minihan; and Doctor of Commercial Science to Edward F. Williams, and Homer W. Bourgeois.

The Most Reverend Archbishop congratulates Edward F. Williams, K.M., D.C.S., as the President of the College smiles approval.

Beginning the day in a tradition most natural to a Catholic College, the candidates receive Holy Communion together at their Baccalaureate Mass.

"Having been awarded the Degrees which admit you to the roll of Graduates of Merrimack College, you are entering this day a worthy company composed of all those everywhere who have enjoyed the privileges and who bear the responsibilities of scholarly culture and training."

Charge to the Graduates.
Very Reverend
Vincent A. McQuade, O.S.A., Ph.D.
